

Application Guidelines for
Obadiah Brown's Benevolent Fund
Providence, Rhode Island

Obadiah Brown's Benevolent Fund was established in Providence in 1823 by bequest of Obadiah Brown to be a fund, independent of New England Yearly Meeting, to enhance the Religious Society of Friends through grants to individuals and Friends' organizations. Sarah Swift, a trustee from Massachusetts, established the Swift Fund in 1914 to be administered by the twelve Trustees of Obadiah Brown's Benevolent Fund. Obadiah Brown's Benevolent Fund is primarily focused on New England Friends and Friends' organizations.

I Grants shall be made for Quaker purposes. OBBF favors discrete projects. "I recommend to (the trustees) specially the printing and disseminating useful books for the promulgation of the gospel and by that means, as well as otherwise, spreading our Religious Principles where they are little known." ¹

- a. As technology has evolved it follows that electronic communications projects such as online publications and film be included.
- b. The promulgation of the gospel is mentioned to reflect the nature of Quakerism as a Christian based faith although "as well as otherwise" does not exclude other writings of Quaker inspiration and values from suitable grant proposals.

II Grants may be made to individuals "of our religious faith who are in need and who shall be or have been engaged in gospel or philanthropic work". OBBF encourages applications from Friends engaged in a wide range of ministries.

III Grants to Friends' organizations are typically for programs with the tendency to produce increasing benefits to the Religious Society of Friends. Grants to organizations are not for regular expenses usually included in operating budgets. OBBF does not contribute to educational organizations for general operating funds, though in particular circumstances it may support Friends attending Friends' institutions.

IV OBBF has been able to respond favorably to a portion of applicants annually with modest grants. Grant amounts have historically ranged from $1,000 to $15,000. Grants are generally limited to one-time applications for each project. OBBF encourages matching funds raised elsewhere and other collaborative funding strategies.
